

Dear FCC Commissioners & Staff:

It is frightening to think that a body would want to restrict the options that we as consumers have to choose how we access the internet. Restricting these options only serves to create monopolies and increase fees. After what the government put Microsoft through for being a great provider of services, it doesn't really make much sense that the FCC or any government agency would be pushing to allow as few companies as possible to be in the market place. I trust that the FCC will do the right thing and allow consumers the options they deserve and not restrict trade in the United States.

Sincerely,
